that which I have done (it).—No. 13, E. 9.

Probably we should read here ebussu, an irregular spelling of ebusu, "(which) I have done," the indirect form of the verb. The Persian copy has Tyamaiya kartam, "what by me is done."

Pers. Kúra Mâda hya nithapatiya âha hachâma hamitriya abava, "the Median forces, which were at home (in their houses), against me revolted." The word rendering "revolted" is destroyed in the Assyrian copy; the letters in Italic type are barely visible in the Persian copy.

mala basû, may be conveniently translated "all of them;" it is made up of the preceding mala and of the verb basû, permansive form of basa, "to be." See Rawlinson, in Journ. R.A.S. 1851, p. xcv., and Dr. Hincks, Journ. Sac. Lit. Jan. 1862, and Grammar, Journ. R.A.S. 1866, p. 495 (16). The literal translation is "as many as exist."
